Poetry.

He is Late!

R. H. STODDARD IN THE ALDINE.

She watches at the porch,
The sun is nearly down;
What keeps her truant lord?
He should be back from town.
One short, sweet year ago
He never made her wait,—
As much too early then,
As now he is too late!

Had Heaven bestowed on me
That little lady there,
Whom love has made so sad,
And sadness made so fair,—
Her hand, her cheek, her mouth
Should not for kisses wait.
Were that sweet armful mine,
I never could be late!

Selected Story.

Over a Cabin Table.

In the summer of 185—, Frank Manly and I were homeward-bound, from China to Boston, in the splendid clipper ship Sunset.

We were children together, and had followed many a butterfly in company. In later years, we had often run after those marvelous butterflies in pink sunbonnets—those Will-o'-the-Wisps in dimity—in other fields; rather as rivals, though, than side-by-side companions to confess it.

This was Frank's first voyage as master. He was now, at two-and-twenty, every inch a sailor and a man. I was his only passenger, running home after some years' truancy, in a period between a closing clerkship and an opening partnership at Canton. These were to me delicious days—care-free, and every hour with my old playfellow was communion of a rare order.

We were chatting one evening openly—for there was now nothing between us but the cabin table. The light burned just low enough for the quiet dreamy hour that Frank reeled off to me the small-talk of the dear old town, of which his memory held an unreckonable cargo.

There was May who had married January, and the squire who had drank himself from affluence to the poor-house. He told of young Skinner, who in boyhood won marbles, and sold them again to the losers at a hundred per cent advance upon regular rates—who never played on the "Fourth," but opened a curbstone bazar of pop-beer—of his own brewing,—fire-crackers, peanuts, and a full line of dried apple tarts—of a low grade. Now he was piously loaning money Saturday afternoons to gain Sunday, at two per cent a month, and wondering what this world would be without interest. He had bought a book, "Business in Heaven," which proved to him that the occupations of earth are continued above. He dwelt with miserly unction upon the life to come.

The steward now appeared with our evening coffee. Then came the usual cigar, and we swung apart in meditation as lightly as two vessels parting company after exchanging sea-courtesies.

"Captain," said I, suddenly, as if something had just come to mind, though the question had been balancing on my tongue for an hour—

"Hal," interrupted my companion, "don't Captain me off-deck, here under the cabin-light, if you love me."

"Well then, my modest old desk-mate, how is that little Amy Woodson whom you used to endow so bountifully in school-days with pickled limes and chewing-gum?"

My captain—the splendid fellow—to show his unconcern, breathed a couple of smoke-wreaths out of his mouth, and replied with counterfeited sadness: "Hal, I shall never have faith again in the power of pickles with school-girls, and I am a doubter forever of the virtue of spruce gum. So, so, my sly boy, you were on that tack, too, were you? But you may as well emulate the example of your forefathers and throw that chest of breakfast-tea overboard, for father Woodson has gone where tea-drinking is neither a blessing nor a sin. No, no, Hal, Roy Elwell weathered us all. By jove, to think of it! The little toad that I nursed through vulgar fractions and the rule of three—who never had spunk enough to kiss a girl under four eyes—to marry Amy! But the ways of women are wondrous, Hal. The Sunset is my choice. Isn't she a beauty? I am wedded to her."

Then he laughed, drew himself up, and I thought, How could a woman resist you, my handsome captain?

"Poor puss, she had a confounded rough way of it," he continued.

"What do you mean?"

"Why haven't you heard of it?"

"Vague rumors only. Her father, cashier of the bank. Wasn't there trouble? Was it all true? Proud old man. His heart broke, I fancy. For Heaven's sake, Frank, tell me what you know," I demanded.

"Well, well, old quill-driver, don't rough up so. I do know about it, and, though I say it, more than any but a very few in the old town. I never was any hand at a yarn, but if you will have it, maybe 'twill harrow you some, seeing you were a little sweet on Amy."

"Come, come, captain—there, chummy, then—begin. But, by George, if you exaggerate one iota, I'll call the Sunset—a lumsy old nooker."

"Well, I needn't ask if you remember Amy," began my vis-a-vis, tormentingly, "nor tell you of her step in the dance, of the color of her hair and eyes, nor what her laugh was like, nor what a woman she has grown. Let me see, you left home in forty—"

"Eight."

"And you remember General Woodson, then, as a cheerful, elastic old gentleman, who, at the bankcounter, told off the notes with a celerity little less than magic, to our unaccustomed eyes. He was a favorite everywhere, you know. With a lad's help he performed all the labor in the bank, except when Amy would come down once in a while to give him a lift on the books. Amy was her father's housekeeper, too; her mother died, just after you left home, I guess. You see the young girl had fish enough to fry. For all, she always had a spare hour and some nicknack of her needlework for us sailor-boys when about leaving home. And the old general would say, 'Luck to you, my lad,' in a mighty good manner that won us.

"But I never could see that she favored one much above another. Once I had bidden her good-by, I remember, and afterward seeing Ben Boltrope call at her house, I stood out of sight and timed him—you laugh—watch in hand, and I had the better of him some odd minutes,—or it may have been seconds. I always think of it when I meet Ben's widow in the street. Ben married the milliner's daughter, Melissa Bliss, whose name we young sea-dogs changed to M'lissy Blissy. He went off to Singapore a month after, second mate of the bark Reindeer, and was never heard from. Her widowhood began, you see, as soon as her honeymoon ended. Melissa wears mourning for him now and always will. And Ben was worthy of all her tears—as good a fellow as ever learned a rope. Go and see her, Hal. But where am I running? Let's tack ship.

"You know the Woodson homestead on the corner of India street. Yes, but you don't know—as we young fellows never think of such things—that the grand-looking place had been in the Woodson family for some generations, and that the general's father left it to him encumbered. The mortgage was never lifted by the latter. The general lived pretty well, thinking his position required it.

"Then in an evil time all Bramblehead ran wild with a land fever—a speculation that promised to make the poor rich, and the rich happy. All the old stockings in all the dark corners in town were emptied of their shillings to buy land in Roostock. Why, people, old people, took money out of their bibles that they had laid away to bury them to invest, expecting it to return them a hundred-fold before it would be needed. Burial day always seems so distant to us, especially if there is a chance to make any money to-morrow.

"Amy's father was bitten by the going madness. He gathered the little he could together. He drew his salary regularly, and let his household bills run. He sold wrongfully a few bank shares that he held in trust for Amy, which an uncle had willed to her, and invested the money in the golden land, secretly, in the name of a brother in Ohio.

"The voyage turned out mighty poor. The land was well timbered, but a hundred miles away from river or tide-water. The bubble burst. So the rich became poor, and the poor became happy thinking how their betters had come down. They were sure of a burial, for nobody was ever too poor for that.

The old gentleman aged. He grew fretful and absent minded. The grocer and the butcher called again and again for their dues—at the front door, too. The milk boy was even more malicious. He chalked on the garden-gate, 'Warnin,' pay up, ol' hoss,' and chuckled to himself around the corner, as he peeped and saw Betty Floyd, the old domestic, spend many minutes spelling out, and many more in scouring off the words and shaking her cloth at the empty street. Thrift had abandoned the household.

"Amy knew but little of the truth. He said he had only the amount of two or three quarters' salary in the lamented land slide. She saw the failing step, and that he did not like to have her note it. He was glad, though, of her help at the bank, which was needed now oftener than ever. The toil began to tell on little Amy. She didn't lose her beauty, though, I don't believe she will ever lose that. My boy, am I tedious?

"Very. Go on."

"Don't blow your smoke in my eyes, then, or you'll swear I'm crying."

"Well, well; forward!"

"Where was I? This went on awhile, the old man keeping the ship on the old tack, close-hauled, flag at the peak, and pumps a-going. But there came a day when the world could do little for Abram Woodson, and he could do less for the world. One morning, when Amy was helping him on with his coat to go to the bank, he staggered and fell upon the sofa. The doctor came and said 'Paralysis.' He revived somewhat, but the old general was a wreck of the saddest kind. He couldn't speak an intelligible word. Amy became his hands, eyes and mind. Roy Elwell was appointed acting cashier, for the directors would not supersede him at once. He lingered for months with his faculties at sixes and sevens. One day he said something that sounded like 'May tenth,' and soon after he dropped anchor for the last time.

"The bank officers, when examining his cash and accounts, discovered a deficiency of between one and two thousand dollars. And they who had held the old general as incorruptible said, 'There is none true under the sun.' His bondsmen were called upon, and the few, which finally means the many, thought they knew the cashier had used the funds in his keeping.

"Amy living secluded with her old domestic, Betty Floyd, was ignorant of the affair at the bank. She knitted worsted work, and fitted ball dresses for her schoolmates of old days. Young Skinner offered her what he called his heart. By jove, twenty young fellows would have come forward for her hand, but there was something in her way that wouldn't let a man with a decent heart offer it. Skinner thought his magnimity twenty per cent above par. He had inherited from his father the mortage on the Woodson homestead, which he threatened to foreclose. Trouble comes in troops.

"Looking over her father's papers one day, Amy discovered a note addressed to her. It was in the neat hand of the general. It told her that he wrote this for her in case anything should happen to him—that the world after he was gone, might judge him amiss. That he had it is true, wronged her, his sweet beloved daughter; that he had been false to his trusteeship; that their means were all gone with the broken land bubble—that his heart and thought were long sick with the secret of it; that, May the 10th, of such a year, he had found his cash unaccountably short, and no man knew it. If he lived long enough he should make it up; yes, make it up, every cent; but Amy must wait for hers; perhaps he could never make that up, and if he did not, would his darling forgiv him?

"Amy bowed beneath this blow. Now appeared the reason of the unpaid bills and the ill supplied household. And the thought came to the stricken girl, how once she had proposed to sell a share of her bank stock and by a gold watch and chain, and on New Year's morning she found them under her breakfast cup, a present from her father. I get all this from sister Nellie, of whom she made a confident. Yes, Hal, Amy bowed as the lily bows when blown upon. She was lily without and rock within. She sent for Roy Elwell. She pressed Roy until she drew from the reluctant fellow the affair as view by the directors. It was a plain case to them. A land enterprise—an opportunity for making money—and the cashier yielding to temptation, borrowed the funds of a bank, thinking to enrich himself, and return the money. They were all the more ready to look on the dark side for him, as many of their dollars had gone the way of his. The fever had been among them, too through Elwell who had been made cashier after the death of the general, she obtained permission from the officers to make a personal examination of the books, to be aided by Roy. Her knowledge of bank routine was now serviceable.

"About this time I returned from an India voyage. I served as boy in the bank awhile, you remember, and Roy, with her consent invited me to lend them a hand. I was glad for her sake, not to say my own.

"Hal, are you yawning?"

'Spin away, spin away, my old boy."

"Well, we met and made our plans, agreeing to make researches after Elwell had finished his day work. By George, Hal, you ought to have seen the girl. Her perceptions were all quickened by pride and love for the honor of the old man. The theory of the directors was not the theory of the daughter. She admitting nothing but the existence of an error that yet might yet be revealed. Roy and I followed her with a low assent, We began, We turned to that May 10th, which he mentioned in the note and named in the night of his speechlessness. We took the first entry of the deposits; we analyzed it. If bills it was so noted; if checks, we followed them to their entry. And so through each and all. Amy surprised us by her thoroughness. Items that Roy and I were willing to check, as being correct beyond question, she looked to again and again before dismissing. The general had been too much harrowed by his trouble to make any systematic analysys of that day's transaction at the time. Who knows but the error, if one, would have detected had he called his quicker-eyed daugher into his confidence?

"We finally arrived at the end of that day's labor, and summons up the figures, we found the balance on hand was two thousand dollars less than the amouut required. Here now was a chance for speculation. What became of the sum? Amy was not long in deciding that its equivalent had been mislaid—some check misplaced; but this was merely guesswork.

"Her proposition at next meeting, was to search thoroughly the papers in the safe. Not succeeding there, books and papers in the vault were taken, one by one and turned leaf by leaf. Thorough? I think so. It was a slow laborious process. Her patience was astonishing. Her glance seemed as though 'twould burn the paper it fell on, But they could not reveal a secret not in their keeping.

"Where was the waste paper put? In a basket. And emptied where? Roy couldn't say. The old woman who swept the rooms was called. She emptied it in the dark closet. Sometimes when out of shavings she used a little of it to start the fire. Amy turned pale. The search among the contents of the closet was assigned for the next day. Was it narrowed to this, the chance of finding a valuable paper in the rubish? She would have had more heart, but for the knowledge of those occasional handfulls taken for kindlings. Piece by piece we went through this accumulated heap of dusty good-by papers, and without success.

"Roy and I had not forseen the end—failure. We didn't anticipate having to see that noble girl sit down disconsolate, with the tears falling upon her falen hands. It was joy for me to labor with her all the way, but when that labor was brought to the bitter end—to see hope go out of her heart by her blessed blue eyes! Roy attended her home,

"The next day he and I were seated in the bank, talking of the affair. 'Roy,' said I 'the Borneo, Charlie Lane, is due; can't we see, from the skylight in the garret, if she is in the bay?'

"He proposed going up to see. Roy went ahead and openened the skylight. The place was dusty as a grave, and just as jolly. There was no Borneo in sight. Account books and bundles of papers lay here and there, with dust upon them nearly a inch deep. And over these things, that had one day a meaning aad a value, and neither now, the spiders had woven their homes, and were having in turn their little cares. We looked about curiously. Roy remarking a book on top of a pile, less dusty than the others proposed to me to take it down stairs as a curiosity. I did. The skylight was lowered, and two sunbeams that had vanished as we opened the light, came back again, and lay athwart one another like bars of dusty gold. Downstairs we sat and examined our prize. It was not a book, but a ledger, evidently belonging to the general, and filled with records of dealings long years before, when in the wood and coal business. The writing was neatness itself. Rarely a blot or an erasure did we see, as Roy sat rather indifferently turning the leaves. Occasionally there remained an unbalanced account. The fuel had become smoke and ashes long ago, and the debtor dust, may be. Here was one Job Jones, charged with a cord of wood a generation ago. Out of this scanty material we imagined a history for this latter Job. We invented for him little pleas for his dilinquency; that he had married a wife; that he had best the town; that he never had it; that it was only half a cord; that he paid for it at the time, etc, Nevertheless, it is a shame, Job Jones, for you to owe forever for the fuel that boiled your kettle, and blessed your hearthstone, and, perchance, warmed to life one of the innumberable little Joneses, we conlnded. Din't his ears burn?

"While we were laughing over this the door softly opened, and Amy Woodson appeared. I had almost expected, twas the ghost of the said Jones.

"She wished again to see the book containing those entries of the 10th, of May. Roy brought it. Amy sat at one side of the table; Elwell and I at the other. She pored over the page, as her father had, doubtless, done before her, with dreamy, misty eyes. We mentioned the reason of our mirth. I took the book, carelessly, and opened it, Roy and Amy looking on as I turned now one leaf, then three or four together; when 'My heavens!' I exclaimed. They started. Amy leaned over the table. Her breath went and came quickly. By jove, I can feel it now, on my cheek. Fever a wind can blow that away. There, staring us all in the face, were two one thousand dollar bank bills. I swear I saw joy go into her eyes.

"It was pretty clear to her. There was fresh writing on the credit side of the account. The old gentleman had had the book from the garret and upon his table that 10th, of May. Exchanging the bills for some customer, he had laid them in the open book and absently closed it. It was then returned to its old place in the garret. His mind being distracted by his pecuniary troubles, the transaction of the bills had made no mark on his memory. This was our theory.

"Amy had dreamed, singularly, that she was greatly comforted by a book, and this was the reason of her coming and caling for the one we had first examined."

'And you say Amy married Roy?"

"Ay, ay; and their boy they've named Frank Manly Elwell. Turn in Hal I must look after my girl, the Sunset."

I obeyed; and in a moment more I thought I landed on a wharf in Bramblehead, and the first sign that met my eyes was "Job Jones, Dealer in Coal, Wood, and Card, For Cash Only." A beak nosed firey eyed little old man leaned over an oldfashioned door that was divided in the middle, half shut and half open.

"Job Jones," said I, "Frank Manly and Roy Elwell have judged you unjustly. That cord of wood they thought you owed for, 'I continued, as his glassy eyes seemed to demand an explanation. The little man was silent, but he gave me a look which said plainly enough, "What is human justice to me, or injustice?"

And Job Jones, for I could not think of him as any other being, became instantly a statue of ice; a tear trickled from each eye, and another trembled splendidly from his nose, and in the sunshine they became—

I awoke and instead of Job Jones my eyes fell upon Jim the steward, who was setting the breakfast in the cabin of the Sunset, on the table over which this tale was told me as I tell it to you—only that drowsy gleam of the cabin-light falls not upon the paper, and never will.—From the February Aldine.

Miscellaneous.

Credit Mobilier Boiled Down.

1. Congress chartered the Union Pacific. July 1, 1862.
2. From north edge of Platt River Valley to the west limit of Nevada.
3. Congress gave the company five alternate sections per mile each side.
4. The United States lent them 6 per cent, bonds, payable in thirty years.
5. And at the following rates: Prairie track $16,000 per mile. Rolling land $48,000 per mile.
6. Those bonds were to be first mortages on everything.
7. Deliverable as forty miles sections were approved by Government Inspectors.
8. Service rendered government were to go on account.
9. So they still had no money from government. Lands could not be sold till the rail reached them, the bonds could not issue till part of the road was made, and people would not subscribe on a second mortage.
10. Government gave up its first mortage, July 2, 1864.
11. Besides accepting a second mortgage government agreed to pay half down for services rendered.
12. So subscribers got a first mortgage.
13. But the first mortgage disclaimer allowed the Company to issue as many of its own first mortgage bonds as the government second mortgage.
14. Then the stockholders determined to contract for the road.
15. So they were to let contracts to themselves.
16. The "Pennsylvania Fiscal Agency" existed with an Indian rubber charter.
17. Durant bought it out and called it "The Crèdit Mobilier of America."
18. Then C. M. Durant & Co. contracted with U. P. R. Durant & Co., to build up U. P. R.
19. So the government second mortgages and the peoples first, shoveled money into one pocket for another of the same party.
20. All but cost of construction was credited to Credit Mobilier.
21. So the dividends became immense.
22. Oakes Ames began to fight Durant in '65, and euchred him in '67.
23. By this time dividends had gone up to 270 per cent, declared, thus earings, equal to nearly 100 more. Total—7,600,000.
24. Ames said he would put the stock where it would "do good." This meant more one sided legislation.
25. The Act of July 2, 1864, forgot to say anything about interest.
26. The Secretary of the Treasury said it should help out the government's half, which was standing on account.
27. Ames said he would have that too—cash down.
28. So he sold Congressmen stock at par, plus discount, to be taken off the purchase money.
29. Now, above the par, there was 80 per cent. Union Pacific bonds due.
30. So one knife cut two cakes, and for 20 shares Credit Mobiler you had only to pay the difference between the Union Pacific dividends and the par stock, plus interest.
31. So 8 per cent value of the stock bought it.
32. Ames thus procured the passing of the ninth section. Army Appropriation Act, March 3, 1871.
33. Government surrendered half the security reserved by its power to demand offsetting services, which, with interest at the demand of Credit Mobilier, per Union Pacific, amounts to about $5,000,000,

A man who Never Fills Out His Term.

The Chicago Evening Journal relates the following of the present Governor of Illinois: "No sooner did Gen. John L. Beveridge return from the war, in which he was a gallant cavalry officer, than he was nominated for Sheriff of this county, and elected. Before his term as Sheriff had expired, he was elected State Senator. Before his office of Senator expired, he was nominated and elected Congressman for the State at large, to fill the vacancy caused by Gen. Logan's resignation. Last Fall, before his term of Congressman had expired, he was nominated and and elected Lieutenant-Governer, which position he entered upon two weeks ago; and now, Governor Oglesby having resigned, Gen. Beveridge becomes Governor of the State. Verily, he is one of the luckiest men, politically, in the United States."

Swift at one time proposed to put a tax on female beauty, and to leave every lady to rate her own charms. He said the tax would be cheerfully paid, and owuld be very productive.

Mishaps of a Persevering Young Woman.

A charming young lady of eighteen Summers, named Carrie L. of Warren, paid a visit to this city a short time since, and, on Saturday afternoon last, she went to the depot of the Warren and Venango Road, intending to return home, but arrived just in time to see the train disappearing round the curve. Bent upon reaching Warren that night, she started out along the view of walking the entire distance. At 7 o'clock in the evening she arrived at Newton, which is twelve miles from the city and upon reaching the middle of the trestle-work at this point, she saw the night train approaching; to go on or recede, or step to one side was impossible, so she jumping down into the chasm twenty feet below. Fortunately the ground was covered with snow-drift, into which she sank up to her arm-pits, thus breaking her fall and saving her life. She did not scream or cry for help, or anything of that sort, but quietly dug herself out, and after half an hour's work regained the track and resumed her journey. Two or three miles further on a still more serious obstacle presented itself—the track was under water as far the eye could reach. Upon looking round she discovered a light in the woods, and concluded that it must be a house. This proved to be the case, and the hospitable family, after hearing her story, took her in and did everything in thier power for her comfort. The next morning she took the train from Newton for Warren, and arrived there in time for dinner.—From the Titusville (Penn.) Herald, Jan. 30.

"Wall," the old lady began. Wall, my dear, some people have very cur'ous notions about gettin' religion. Ther's my neighbor, Deacon Jabe Sniffin, who's makin' a fortune tradin, horses. Wall, he thought he 'sperienced a change of heart, but he didn't want 'sperience a change of business. That was touchin' a tender p'int—might interfere with profits, you know. So he thought he'd consult with Deacon Aminadah Tweedle, who kept a store, and did up the sugar and whiskey over night. 'Now, look a here; you don't s'pose, Brother Tweedle,' he began, drawing the words through his nose—'you don't s'pose them little stories, sort'o lies like that you and I tell in the way of trade will be reckoned up again us in the day of judgment? Sarcumstanced as we air, we can't help it, you know. I don't s'pose it will make no sort o'difference at all in the sight of the Lord, long's the heart's all right; now does it Brother Tweedle?"

The owner of a cow, divested of her tail by a felonious dog, recently brought suit for damages, which an Iowa jury placed at just $5. The outraged feelings of the cow and the loss of dignity consequent on the forcible removal of this ornamental not to say useful (in fly time), appendage, was strangely and unwarrantably ignored. What is the value of a cow's self-respect?

John Hampden Pheasants, the editor of the Richmond Whig, wishing to provoke John Randolph, whom he was about to meet, placed himself directly in his path, and insultingly remarked, "I never give way to a scoundrel," when, quick as thought and with great suavity and nonchalance of manner, Randolph passed round him replying, "I always do, sir."

The Chicago Tribune ventures the conundrum, "Why do flour mills burn?" We never knew they did, says the Peoria Review, having never been burned by one, but suppose it's because they're combustible. Here's one for the Tribune. "Why do Summer roses fade?"

"Bob Brown, did you say that my father had not as much sense as Billy Smith's little yellow dog?" "No; I never said any such thing. All I said was that Billy's little dog had more sense than your father; that's all I ever said." "Well, it's well you didn't say the other, I tell you."

A CHAPTER ON ECONOMY.

We remember our reading an account some time ago of a couple of gentlemen who were seeking contributions for a worthy charity, and for that purpose entered the office of a wealthy business firm in New York City. As they approached the desk of the head man of the establishment—it was in the days of wafers—they heard the following conversation. "Are you using a whole wafer to seal that letter?" "Yes, sir" answered the apprentice clerk. "Then break it intwo, and never use a whole wafer when a half will do just as well." "Well," said one of the gentlemen to the other, "that looks rather discouraging to us; a man so economical, will hardly be disposed to give to any charitable object." But when they approached him, and he had heard their statement, he promptly subscribed $500 to their cause. Astonished at the liberality of the contribution, they told him what they had overheard him say about the wafer, and their fears about getting anything from such a man. "Gentlemen," said he, "it is by just such economy as that I have made my fortune, and am able to give you $500 for your worthy charity."

And this is no exception in principle to the universal and immutable law of success. Economy, care in every department of one's business, a most frugal saving of the dimes and the pennies, as well as the dollars, that is the origin and foundation of nearly all the fortunes that have ever been made.

The case of the wafers may be a strong one, in that particular an exceptional case, but they who know the secret of the accumulating wealth of our great cities and the most prosperous portions of the farmers and working class, know full well that their wealth grows little by little. It is the result of a most thorough rigid and systematic economy. It is not because they have large incomes as a rule. Their receipts are small but they make their money go a good way; they buy nothing they can do without; they spread a frugal board; they spend next to nothing on their appeites, and by and by they sceneshifts, they become masters of the situation, capital increases on their hands, and by the time their children are old enough to begin to need an education, they can spend for them without embarrassment.

There is no one thing in which the people of this section so much need to learn a thorough lesson, and make a radical change than in the matter of economy. The mechanics and laboring men of this city, for instance, ought to be very prosperous and well to do in life. It is easy to spend all that is earned and run in debt besides—and not one in fifty won't have all their wants supplied if they spend ten times what they earn. But a firm determination to lay by a portion at the week's wages always, and not touch it under any circumstances, and a faithful adherence to that rule, will eventually make every man independent. That is the way that fortunes must be made, if made at all—and by this me thodthe door to fortune is open to all.

A SAD STORY.

It is often asserted that there is always work for those who are willing to do it; a statement we shall not attempt to dispute. But it does seem as if, in some instances, the amount paid in return for labor render a condition of no work at all far the more preferable. In one of; the police courts of Brooklyn, last Friday, a case came up, the bare statement of which is sufficient to rouse the feeling of indignation in the breast of every man in the community, except, perhaps, just such employers as are here mentioned. A poor seamstress, a widow with four little children, was arrested in the City of Churches the day previous to the one mentioned, charged with pawning clothing given her to make.

She stated, on trial, that she was hired to do the work in question by a manufacturer, who paid her seventeen cents for sewing four pair of trousers, fifty cents for making twelve pairs of drawers, and twenty-five cents for making six shirts. She failed to complete the task by the designated time, and the employer therefore refused to pay her the liberal sum agreed upon. The poor creature was without food for herself and family, and, not having the money to buy it with, pawned the clothes. Investigation showed the statements made to be true; the nominal fine inflicted was paid by a benevolent by-stander, and additional aid furnished for the relief of the distressed family. It is to be regretted that the law provided no means for the punishment of the rascally employer.

"Oh she was so fair,
But sorrow came and left its traces there."
Poet.

He doesn't state what became of the rest of the harness.

ENCOURAGING PROSPECTS.

As anomalous as it may appear it is nevertheless true that this Albemarle region of North Carolina is both very poor and incomparably rich. Estimating wealth by dollars in hand it is poor; but compute it according to its wonderful resources it is rich.

Big farms and broad plantations and acres upon acres of undeveloped timber lands have made and are keeping the people poor. However well it may have been under the old regime for one man to cultivate his hundreds of acres, it will not do—will not pay to pursue that policy now. Our system of husbandry must be adapted to the new and improved systems of labor. We must have smaller farms and have them better cultivated. With these will come a denser and more enterprizing population; they will insure the erection of more and better buildings every arable acre all about us will be made available to its utmost extent; the wealth of the country will increase, and soon the anomaly we have called attention to will no longer apply to us.

We have lived here long enough to understand the climate and soil as well as the special great needs of this section of country. The first we know to be mild and genial; the second is naturally fertile and enduring, and as to the latter, we sum it up in "smaller farms and better tilled." And we have taken some pains in these columns, as well as through other sources, to call the attention of Northern agriculturists to the inviting fields open here. We are beginning to attract the attention of the very class we so much need—a class that will aid us and benefit themselves in coming here. We mean the small farmers who have accumulated competencies and who are anxious to enlarge their means in order to settle their children around them; also men who have capital to put in operation the manufactories so long needed in this region.

We feel hopeful. An industrial revolution is beginning—is moving on. We will yet receive the benefits of the blessings that are slumbering about and around us.

THE VALUE OF IMMIGRARION.

The value of immigration to a country is by no means represented by the number of people added to its population Each man who comes here to settle brings with him at least from five hundred to one thousand dollars in cash.—Some treble this amount. Suppose it averages a thousand dollars to each family. Then every hundred families would add one hundred thousand dollars to the actual pecuniary resources of our county and this, too, before they do a stroke of work to improve and develope.

Statistics have demonstrated that the first years work of each able-bodied immigrant is worth at least two hundred dollars. Then one hundred able bodied workers will add by their labor in one year twenty thousand dollars to the capital of our county, in addition to the amount of money they bring with them.

Now there is no reason why we should not have this immigration. By proper effort it can be— it will be induced to come. And when once fairly begun when the tide is changed from the West to the South, as it should be, the annual increase will not be counted by hundreds but will run into the thousands.

COMPULSORY EDUCATION.

In a recent lecture by Prof. NORTHROP on the subject of Education, he states that before going abroad, he had opposed enforced attendance, but his objections were removed by the results there seen. In Germany and Switzerland, the masses everywhere favor it. They are proud of their schools and prize education. The law executes itself, because it commands universal approval. Said a resident of Dresden "were the question of compulsory attendance to be decided to-morrow by a plebicite, it would be sustained by an almost unanimous vote."

The question is now up for discussion in many American States. It is this winter before the legislatures of Maine, New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, North Carolina, and Mississippi. Michigan, New Hampshire, and Connecticut have lately adopted a compulsory law, and so far in each of these States it works well.

SENATOR POOL.

In these colums some months ago, unsolicited and without consulting a single individual, we suggested the name of Hon JOHN POOL as the man to represent the South in the new Cabinet of President GRANT. Since then we see the same recomendation made in hundreds of journals, North, East, West and South. Senator POOL has already made a national reputation. The country looks upon him as a man of representative character and force; as one who understands by intuition as it were the popular sentiment and peculiarities of the South, and as a man of ability, sagacity and integrity. His selection would not only be satisfactory to the country but it would be especially flattering and gratifying to the South

A charge of thirty cents per bushel for the carriage of corn, when the freight should be only fifteen cents, absorbs one half the value of the crop; and this process, repeatedly from year to year during the whole period of a decade, exhausts what would otherwise become the surplus of the farmer, impoverishes the entire agricultural community—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

And yet notwithstanding all this the tide of emigration has tended to the West. Now that the South is open—the people anxious for and cordially wellcoming the Northern immigrant, and the carriage of produce to market cheaper by more than one half—we may expect to see the current changed. It is changing. The time has come when enterprize and industry can be better rewarded in the South than in the West.

Among the addresses delivered before the Horticultural Society, at Freeport, was one by L. S. Pennington, of Jordan, on the importance of the acclimation of plants, &c. It is highly spoken of—Sterling (Ill.) Standard.

During our recent Western visit we had the good fortune to make the personal acquaintance of Dr. PENNINGTON, and we found him to be one of the most intelligent Pomologists we have ever met. He is not only theoretically at home on whatever pertains to Horticulture, but his long and successful experience as a practical fruit grower makes him an authority on the subject. We should be glad to have a copy of the address.

AMEDUS, king of Spain, not having the cordial and united support he had expected and desired, has abdicated and departed to his native country. It was feared that insurection and anarchy would follow, but the latest reports are that a Republic has been established and all is quiet. It is reported that a new national flag has been decided upon and that its colors will be violet, white and red. The "Red, White and Blue"—that most beautiful of colors—was, of course, out of the question.

We have seen a copy of the Platte Journal published at Columbus, Nebraska, announcing the arrival of our old Pennsylvania friend WILLIAM BURGESS, Indian Agent of the Pawnees at Genoa. The editor refers to him in quite flattering terms, and we are sure his favorable impression will be increased on continued acquaintance. We feel confident that he will be found to be the right man in the right place.

A South Western editor thus compliments a neighboring brother of the craft:

He either sits in an office with a very low ceiling, or he has very long ears! Which is it?

The latter declares the deceased editor to have been insane.

Our Washington Letter.

Washington, D. C., Feb. 13, 1873.

Hon. Jas. G. Blair, who stands high as a valuable M. C. from Missouri, says that Col. Yorke, of Kansas, is a gentleman and of unquestioned veracity, and an indefatigable worker in the Republican party. He is too true to see it outraged; and too pure to engage in any act that would seemingly place him in a condition for censure unless for the public good. Mr. Yorke edited a leading Republican paper in Mr. Blair's district about two years ago, and was the devoted friend of Col. Benjamin, who preceded Mr. Blair for six years; and Col. B. made Mr. Yorke his special confident for years. Mr. Y. removed to Kansas about two years ago, and having maintained his character for uprightness of conduct which characterized him in Missouri, has been promoted by the people of Kansas to the position of State senator.

Mr. Pomeroy's triumph depends upon destroying Mr. Yorke's character; and this Mr. Blair feels confident he will never do. Mr. Blair says he has no acquaintance with Mr. Pomeroy and has no ill feeling toward him; but he can not set still and see so pure a man as Col. Yorke destroyed, that Mr. Pomeroy may escape a condemnation that justly awaits him.

It is now charged that the Credit Mobilier did not confine its corrupting operations to a few Congressmen. It is stated that several influential journals of the country were subsided and their influence secured by corrupt considerations. In the present excited state of the public mind it is possible to ventilate almost any absurd fancy and give it the appearance of truth. It is to be hoped that some investigating committee will get hold of the truth in this case and show up the guilty ones.

The reduction of our permanent military force at the South is a significant evidence of the rapid growth of loyal sentiment in that distracted region. The projected visit of the President and members of the Cabinet will be of very great benefit to the national cause, and will tend very greatly to ameliorate the sectional bitterness which still survives the great civil war. It seems so strange that a section of our Union enjoying such wonderful material resources should have there held in [illegible] by the bad spirit of [illegible] people. The day of Southern prosperity, however, is dawning.

Among the [illegible] of the Credit Mobilier organization was [illegible] in the Philadelphia Court of Common Pleas to declare it dissolved on the ground that it had done no business since July 1868. The court, however, stated that the government had business with it and that it conld not so easily slink out of existence to avoid the payment of its just dues to the public.

It is the serious intention of the authorities here to have another Carnival immediately following the inauguration, such as was had two years since on the completion of the wood pavement on Pennsylvania Avenue. Such an idea seem to be approved of by everyone here, and if concluded on, there will be no dificulty in getting subscription from the people to defray the expenses attending it.

O'Brien, now under the sentence of death, to be hung on the 27th of this month for the murder of Mr. Cunningham several months since, has been refused a new trial. O'Brien, at the time of the homicide, was a policeman and had previously borne a good character. In the moment of excitement, and while under he influence of liquor, commenced the fatal deed. His friends are making a great effort to induce the President to commute his sentence to imprisonment for life. The President is not given to interferring with the judgements of the courts and juries, and it is anticipated that we will have another hanging exhibition.

The number of distilleries in operation in the United States on the 1st instant was 311, with a daily producing capacity of 278,519 gallons of spirits.

It is not at all unlikely that John Bull's mortification over the late Alabama treaty and the decision of the German Emperor awarding us the island of San Juan will produce a change in the ministers. In spite of the late enormous growth of material interest, industrial and commercial, the combative tendencies of the popular mind have unmistakeably shown themselves. The surplus valor which might have been exercised upon the Yankee now promises to find vent upon the Russians in Asia. Something must be done to meet the whims of Johnny's taurine humor or there will be a lot of raw material spoilt.

The indications of a coal famine in England are becoming daily more alarming. The cost of coal production has risen 100 per cent. within a year. This difficulty has been felt by railroads, manufactories and in private life. This life blood of British industry and commerce is becoming impoverished. That proud supremacy which once lorded it over every civilized market in the world is losing its tone and beginning to assume an unwonted humanity. The day of English supremacy is fast passing away. England has but 6,000 square miles of workable coal area, while we have 600,000 square mile yet untouched.

A Murder at Murfreesboro—Geo. W Thompson Fatally Stabbed by Charles Adkins.

Murfreesboro, N. C., Feb. 17th, 1873.

To the Editor of the North Carolinian;

About nine o'clock on the night of the 14th inst., in the town of Murfresboro, George W. Thompson was fatally stabbed by Charles W. Adkins.

It appears that Mr. Thompson went to Mr. Adkins shop when an altercation took place between them and Mr. Thompson knocked Mr. Adkins down and as he was rising struck him again. Mr. Adkins then staggering back into the street some twenty five or thirty yards and Thompson pursuing him. They then got together but were soon separated by a gentlemen who happened to be passing by, when Mr. Thompson immediately walked off towards his shop exclaiming I am a dead man. He reached his shop, went in and set down on his bed, and died in about three minutes. He was cut just above the collar bone on the right side. The gash was about one and a half inches long. Dr. Lawrence was sent for at once, but did not arrive 'till after Mr. Thompson's death. Mr. Adkins surrendered himself to the Sheriff, and was on the following day committed to jail. The preliminary examination was had before Mr. Parker J. P., and was conducted in his behalf by Maj. J. J. Yeates, T. R. Jernigan and Maj. Jno. W. Moore, who have been retained as his counsel.

The occurence created considerable excitement, it being the night of the concert at the Chowan Baptist Female Institute.

It is thought that both parties had been drinking.

T.

From the State Capital.

Raleigh, N. C., Feb. 14th, 1873.

To the Editor of the North Carolinian

The session of the Legislature drags slowly along. Nothing of interet, save a slight personal combat between the Senator from Yadkin and the Senator from Jackson, upon the floor of the Senate during the discussion of the school law. Such was the dexterity with which the Doorkeeper served both parties, and rent them asunder that no damage of a bodily nature was done to either party. It is thought that the Legislature will rest from its labors about the 3d of March.

It does seem that the mind has not yet appeared in our Halls of Legislation sufficient to openly and boldly grapple with the great issues of the hour. Fearing lest they wound some ones feelings, they smother over smuggle up, and but partially touch the questions of vital importnnce to the people—while hours days and weeks are consumed in discussing matters of no general or scarcely specific value.

Let us hope for the time when North Carolina shall have in her councils men who are not afraid of their shadows, but knowing their duty, proceed hastily to perform it.

L.

From Washington.

In the Senate Mr. Pomeroy explicitly denied the charges that he endeavored to bribe the Kasas Legislature, making a sweeping denial of all the accusations and demanded a Committee of Investigation which was granted. Senator Wilson's letter of Resignation was announced. The bill to provide for the distribution of the money received from Great Britian under award of the Geneva Tribunal was passed. Three Senators were appointed as a Committee to make arrangements for the second inauguration of President Grant.—On the 12th the Electoral vote for President and Vice President by the two Houses in joint session. The Senate, preceded by the Sergeat-at-Arms, went to the Hall of the House. Vice President Colfax took the Speaker's Chair, and the counting went on without interruption until "the State of Georgia" was reached. Mr. Hoar made the point that the three votes cast for Horace Greeley could not be counted. The vote of Mississippi was objected to by Mr. Trumbull on account of some informality in the Governor's certificate. The Senate retired to its own chamber, and each House deliberated on these points. At 3-30 P. M., another joint session was held, and both Houses having determined that the certificate attached to the vote of Mississippi was sufficient, it was counted. There being now concurrence as to the three votes of Horace Greeley from Georgia, they were rejected. Objection being made to the vote of Florida, Louisiana, Arkansas and Texas. the joint convention again dissolved, and each House deliberated upon the several points. When they met again the votes of Texas and Florida were counted: Arkansas and Louisiana were not. Grant and Wilson received 286 votes.

In the House the West Point Appropriation bill was passed. A bill recompensing loyal creditors whose debts were confiscated by the Confederate Government by dividing among these the sum of $203,334 captured by the United States was passed. The Postal bill was passed. Messers Dawes and Beck were appointed a Committee to wait on President Grant and Senator Wilson and inform them of the result of the counting of the Electoral vote.

From Raleigh.

In the Senate the following Amendments to the Constitution have passed by the requisite majority. Bills in relation to public Debt, in relation to State University—taking it out of Common School system, abolishing Superintendent Public Works, in relation to exemptions, in relation to State Census, in relation to Public Charities, in relation to Federal office-holders, in relation to biennial Sessions of the Legislature, in relation to certain officers and for renumbering the section in the Constitution. Every proposition looking to any change, interference or alteration, whatever, in the Judicial, County or Township systems failed. Mr. Grandy introduced the following bills: one authorizing Commissioners of Pasquotank county, to levy a special tax for building a Courthouse, a bill to authrize the Commissioners of Chowan county to issue coupons to pay the indebtedness of the county. Bills were also introduced authorizing the Commissioners of Camden and Curritucks to levy a special tax.

In the House the Amendments of the Senate have been concurred in. The Committee on Privileges and Elections unseated J. E. Moore (Dem.) of Martin and gave it to John R. Mizzell (Rep) A large number of private bills have been passed.

The Centennial.

A VOICE FROM THE OLD NORTH STATE.

The subjoined letter, addressed by the Senator from North Carolina, to a gentleman well known in our city, who has, from its inception, taken an active part in promoting the movement for the Centennial Independence Celebration, will be gratifying to the fiends of the movement. The letter is patriotic and national in sentiment, and worthy the grand old State the Senator so ably represents:—Philadelphia Press.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 7, 1873.

Colonel Jesse E. Payton:

MY DEAR SIR: I was happy to meet you a few days ago, and to learn that you were taking great interest in the Centennial Anniversary. On your visit to the State of North Carolina I hope that you will receive sympathy and encouragement, both from the people and the Legislature. It will be an event of national importance, and one in which every American should feel a just pride. It has a peculiar interest to the people of my own State. They inaugurated the Revolution, and were the first to adopt a declaration of independence. They feel pride in their heroic ancestry, and are imbued with a nationality of sentiment equal to any. They ought to be well represented at the anniversary celebration. The State possesses a vast amount of undeveloped mineral wealth, with its agricultural resources, can there be brought prominently to the attention of the country.

You have my entire sympathy in your noble efforts, and any aid which lies in my power will be cheerfully rendered.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant, JOHN POOL.

Important Bankrupt Decision.

The Greensboro' New North State says: "Hon. Robert P. Dick, Judge of the United States District Court for the Western District of North Carolina has delivered an opinion in the matter of E. A. Vogler and A. F. Pfohl, bankrupts, in which he holds that the Homestead and Personal property Exemptions provided for in Art. X of the Constitution of North Carolina, are good as against pre existing as well as subsequently contracted debts, and must be allowed in courts of bankruptcy in this district, by virtue of the provisions of the Act of Congress of June 8, 1872, amending the Bankrupt Law.

The decision in case of Hill vs. Kessler by the Supreme Court of N. Carolina, is considered and fully sustained.

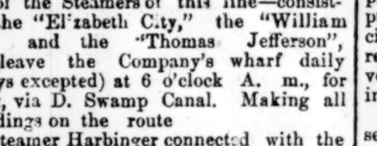

Homesteads already allotted where there is no fraud, are to be recognized and allowed in bankruptcy. Where they have not been set apart previous to the commencement of proceedings in bankruptcy, the allotment will be made by the assignee under the directions of the Court.

Where the land and personal property have been sold and the fund is undistributed, $1,000 in money out of the proceeds arising from the sale of the land will be allowed in lieu of the homestead, and the value of the reversionary interest to creditors will be ascertained and adjusted by the Court. The $500 in money arising from the sale of personal property exemption.

Judge Dick in this decision has fully considered and discussed the policy of bankrupt and homestead laws."

PROSPECTUS.

THE REPUBLIC.

Believing that the inestimable privileges of self-government guaranteed by the Federal Constitution involve corresponding duties, and that among these are sleepless vigilance and the devotion of the best thoughts and efforts of the citizen in aid of the preservation and developement of our country and institutions, we have determined, in furtherance of these objects, to establish a monthly magazine devoted to the discussion of the science of government and to a review of political events.

Assuming that the legitimate objects of good government is provision for welfare and happiness of the citizen, his physical comfort, educational growth and moral development, THE REPUBLIC will bring to this test all economic questions, political action, and governmental measures.

Holding firmly that in a republic, constituted as ours is, political parties are essential, and that they furnish the best, not to say the only means of that constant and severe scrutiny to which power should always be subjected, THE REPUBLIC will insist that the country is not only safe, but safest with its destiny in the keeping of the Republican party; that its measures of reform and progress must be carried forward through its instrumentality, and that its permanent ascendency should be maintained so long as it responds to the demands of enlightened and progressive public opinion.

THE REPUBLIC will avoid unwarranted censure of opponents as well as indiscriminate praise of friends—aiming at that degree of independence and candor which concede justice to both. It will not waste words, influence, or power by purely negative criticisms, but will endeavor to promote correct action by affirmatively and plainly showing the better way. True, this line of criticism involves thought, care, investigation—with the exercise of an impartial judgment; but history has conclusively demonstrated that by these means the cause of truth and good government can be best advanced.

THE REPUBLIC will furnish a brief and accurate record of events of political and general interest, as—

The proceedings of Congress.
The decisions and actions of the Executive Departments.
The action of States and of political bodies of national import.
The progress of material and educational development.
Decisions of the judiciary of political or financial importance and of general application.

The publication being monthly, the record will be made up after the events have transpired, aud will make, at the close of the year, a volume of accurate and valuable information in convenient form for preservation and reference.

Among the topics claiming discussion will be;

The relative power and jurisdiction of the Federal and State Government; the expansion of territory, revenue, finance, education, industrial schools, postage telegraph, postal savings banks, railway and canal tarnsportation, life and fire insurance, river and harbor improvements, the public health, reforms in the public service, and the establishment of equal civil and political rights. On these and kindred subjects THE REPUBLIC will aim to convey reliable information, excite thought, and induce action.

The writers for THE REPUBLIC have been selected from among those whose sagacity, judgment and energy were thoroughly tested in the recent political contest; and their names are withheld now, as then, for the sole reason that they prefer success through reason, argument, and the merit of their productions.

Moved by these considerations, and subordinating the question of remuneration entirely, we appeal with confidence to those who during the recent campaign, responded so liberally in money, time, and effort, to aid in the introduction of THE REPUBLIC. The Magazine will be furnished at as near cost price as practable, and will be enlarged wenever the patronage received will justify increased expenditure.

THE REPUBLIC will be published monthly. on superior paper, in clear type, and will contain forty-eight pages of reading matter, exclusive of advertisements.

TERMS:

Two dollars a year, in advance.
Single copies, twenty-five cents.
Clubs of five, remittidg ten dollars, will be entitled to six copies.

Remittances should be made by money orders, drafts or Registered letters.

Specimen copies will be sent, postage paid, to any person enclosing ten cents.

NORTH CAROLINIAN

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 19, 1873.

TO NORTHERN VISITORS.

Elizabeth City is 50 miles South East of Norfolk, Va. Parties coming here from the North should take passage on the Bay line Steamers which leave Baltimore at 4 P. M. every evening, and arrive at Portsmouth the next morning in time to connect with the Elizabeth City Steamer daily.

THIS WEEK'S ADVERTISEMENTS.

We call attention to the following new advertisements in this issue.

Local and Personal.

Make your wants known through the NORTH CAROLINIAN. It will pay.

The Fisheries will very soon begin operations. The prospects are very flattering.

Who wouldn't live South after reading the accounts of the severe Northern weather?

The Opening Ball at the Albemarle House to-morrow night promises to be a grand affair.

The good words of our friend from Shiloh are appreciated. May all his hopes be realized.

Our Raleigh correspondent thinks the Legislature will "rest from its labors" about the 3d of March. Let the people be thankful.

M. B. CULPEPPER Esq., the newly appointed Clerk of the U. S. District Court, has fitted up an office in WOOD'S building on Road Street.

Some of our subscribers at South Mills complain that they do not get their papers regularly. Mr. Postmaster what is the matter? We send them every week.

To our young correspondent from Manteo we say: You are right. Speak your mind when it is necessary, but hold your tongue when you have nothing to say.

Reader! if you like the CAROLINIAN, subscribe for it. Quit annoying your neighbor by borrowing his copy. Encourage the publisher by coming to the office and paying a year in advance.

Officers in the Navy prevent rust and preserve the brightness of their instruments by smearing them with equal parts of olive oil and carbolic acid—a plan which housewives and husbandmen might practice with profit.

The Albemarle region of North Carolina must be made by Art and Enterprise, what it was intended to be by Nature, the Garden spot of the United States. It is this we are laboring for, and to accomplish it we invoke the cooperation of all.

The Brigs "Wm. McFarlane" and "Faugh a-Ballagh" referred to in our issue of the 5th inst., as having been wrecked on Currituck Beach, were completely broken up. An English Schooner, the "William," also went ashore on the 6th, inst on Chickamicomico Island.

Messrs ROGERS & ETHERIDGE, of Roanoke Island, have just had a splendid new Steamer built for their heavy fishing trade. It is named the "Sparkle," and it is a sparkling beauty. It cost near $20.000. They propose during the Fishing season, to make three trips a week from Ronake Marshes to Norfolk, to connect with the New York Steamers. In these waters she makes from ten to twelve miles an hour.

The Land and Lumber Company is being reorganized and will resume business on a more extensive scale than ever before. Through the untiring efforts and indefatigable energy of Dr. UNDERWOOD, able capitalists and gentlemen of large business experience have become identified with it, and will make it a success. Enthusiast though he be, and sometimes denounced as visionary, all now acknowlege that to his remarkable fore thought and wonderful perseverance against apparently insurmountable obstacles and difficulties, is this section very largely indebted for the industrial progress going on and for the bright prospect of the prosperous future just opening up.

On Wednesday last, Feburay 12, ANDREW J. BELCH was hung at Edenton for the murder of THOMAS H. EVANS in Hertford county near a year ago. It was a brutal murder for money. He confessed the crime—that he met his victim going to the store after night, and entered it with him'; that they were friends; that soon after being in the store he picked up an axe close by and gave EVANS two blows in the head, which instantly killed him; that he then rifled the dead man of his watch, pistol and $200. in money and then fitted himself out with clothing from the store and fled. He was followed by the officers and finally captured in Baltimore. Upon being arraigned for trial at Winton, by affidavit, the case was removed to Edenton, and was tried at the special term in Dec. last, Hon. W. A. MOORE presiding. BELCH not only confessed this brutal murder but that he had committed three before—a colord man at Norfolk, another man on the Dismal Swamp Canal, and a third at Salisbury. He was a desperado—one of the dangerous class. The awful fate before him appeared to make no impression. He ascended the scaffold with stoic indifference, and, after a rambling and incoherent speech, passed to his final doom showing no trepridation or anxiety and evincing no fear or remorse. Through a defect in arranging the rope, the knot slipped when the trap was dropped and the victim fell to the ground. He was lifted up, the rope readjusted and the requirements of the law finally executed. He was yet a young man, having been born in Bertie county on the 16th, of Jan., 1849. He was six feet four inches in hight and weighed 185 pounds.

Friday last was "Valentine's day." It used to be the recognized time for sending one's "lady love" a testimonial to her general loveliness, but like a great many other festivals it has fallen from grace, and now every idiot who can write and pluck up impudence enough to send his dirty caricature does it.

Capt. J. W. ETHERIDGE, of Roanoke Island, has rented the Elizabeth City Ice House. He informs us that he will have it filled with several hundred tons before the present month expires. As his Fishing operations require so much ice he will purchase a large amount and consequently will get it at the very lowest figures; hence he proposes furnishing the retail trade and the public the coming summer at a reduced rate. Success to such enterprise; and Captain ETHERIDGE is an enterprising man.

The Credit Mobilier Scandal.

The Credit Mobilier Investigation is the all important subject of interest at Washington. The "Credit Mobilier," it would seem, is a sort of "fancy" Financial Corporation—or stock-broking concern—originated by certain Railroad financiers for the purpose of speculating in Railroad enterprises. It was chartered by the Legislature of Pennsylvania half a dozen years or so ago. It was started in imitation of the Credit Mobilier of France. After the charter was procured, the corporation was first organized in Philadelphia, and the original Directors commenced business by voting each other "30 shares of paid up stock," at $1,000 a share without paying in a dollar. The name was soon afterwards changed to the 'Pennsylvania Fiscal Agency," but nothing was done by the organization under that name. According to Mr. Smith's account, the charter, stockbook and papers were soon after stolen by some sharpers and carried off to the City of New York, where the Company, now known as the "Credit-Mobilier of America" was permanently re-organized for "business." The nature of the business was peculiar. Oliver Ames, Oakes Ames, and Mr. McCombs, and other officers and contractors of the Union Pacific Railroad, were the leading spirits, and the "Credit-Mobilier' was made a sort of "pool" for their profi and stealings, both from the Railroad Company, and the Government which granted heavy subsides towards building the Road. To prevent Congressional inquiry into suspicious transactions, and secure further favors, the Managers of the Credit-Mobilier made it a special point to inveigle leading Congressmen into, and give them an interest in the concern. These favored few were offered Mobilier stock at the 'ground floor' price of nothing per share, though each share was rated at $1,000 and was at the time drawing half yearly dividends of fifty, sixty or one hundred per cent,, so that the lucky 'stockholder' who was admitted into the 'Ring' had his stock more than paid by 'dividends, the first year of the 'investment.' It was "Credit Mobilier" with a vengence! The sharpers who ran this patent 'Confidence Machine' kept their own secrets, and all outsiders were made to believe that it was a legitimate institution based upon sound and honest business principles. This wat done to catch the influential men a' Washington and give the 'Mobilier corporation character. Leading Republican and leading Democratic Congressmen were thus inveigled into taking the stock urged upon them by Ames & Co., probably not dreaming that they would compromise their reputations by so doing. In fact some of the men who were persuaded to dip in the concern were made to believe that they were doing the country a service, by helping by their influence and encouragement to build the Pacific Railroad!

The progress of the investigation so far, goes to show that among this class of victims was Hon. Henry Wilson, Vice President Colfax, William D. Kelley, Senator Logan and others. Wilson and Logan discovered at once the nature of the cheat, and 'backed out' of the concern, utterly refusing to receive any dividends' upon a capital which they had not invested. Colfax and Kelly also gave notice of the withdrawal from the concern as soon as they found out that they were being used as stool pigeons, and Kelley has turned over whatever interest he may have to the U. S. Government.

The 'stock' was distributed among Republicans and Democrats, without partiality. Senator Patterson, (Rep.) of New Hampshire; Representative Brooks, (Dem.] of New York, and Ex-representative Boyer, Democrat, of the Montgomery district of Pa., appear to have had fat pickings. Mr. Boyer, who appeared voluntarily before the Committee, boldly acknowledged that he was in the concern, boasted that it was a good thing, and his only regret was that he had not taken more stock in it.

There was an attempt to connect Speaker Blaine with the scandal, but the Speaker has shown clear skirts and came off in flying colors.

FOUTZ'S
CELEBRATED
Horse and Cattle Powders.

This preparation, long and favorably known, will thoroughly re-invigorate broken down and low-spirited horses, by strengthening and cleansing the stomach and intestines.

It is a sure preventive of all diseases incident to this animal, such as LUNG FEVER, GLANDERS, YELLOW WATER, HEAVES, COUGHS, DISTEMPER, FEVERS, FOUNDER, LOSS OF APPETITE AND VITAL ENERGY, &c. Its use improves the wind, increases the appetite—gives a smooth and glossy skin—and transforms the miserable skeleton into a fine-looking and spirited horse.

To keepers of Cows this preparation is invaluable. It is a sure preventive against Rinderpest, Hollow Horn, etc. It has been proven by actual experiment to increase the quantity of milk and cream twenty per cent. and make the butter firm and sweet. In fattening cattle, it gives them an appetite, loosens their hide, and makes them thrive much faster.

In all diseases of Swine, such as Coughs, Ulcers in the Lungs, Liver, &c., this article acts as a specific. By putting from one-half a paper to a paper in a barrel of swill the above diseases will be eradicated or entirely prevented. If given in time, a certain preventive and cure for the Hog Cholera.

A Live Soil.

A rich soil has warmth. In a certain sense it has life, hence warmth. I see from where I am seated, a hill divided by a line fence. On one side is a green meadow; on the other side a barren—a pale field, like the rest of the land about it—for this is autumn, November the third. We have known this difference between the two fields to extend later in the fall, the one showing a fine green under the early, light snows.

The two fields are alike in soil, both a light drift, not very favorable to growth without manure. The one has received the manure always in top-dressings and the soil turned down, thus charging the soil with vegetable manure, the all-important element, humus. Hence the difference in the two soils; for one has received little or no treatment—plaster a few times. There is a deadness in the soil of the one, which permits the frost to have its full effect. The other has a warmth, which is generative, and gathers by its wealth a thick coat, which still farther warms, so that the frost can only penetrate partially; thus favoring the roots of the plant. And so it is with the winter wheat and rye in such land, and as we have here in new land. It does one good to see the green wheat on the black (new) soil, fenced off by the woods, and inclined to the north. But there it is, with the life in it, the warmth of the soil. It has a comfortable look, showing that all is well with it.

Does any one doubt that here will be a good crop—old fertility, old humus, ashes, (which are mineral) to help it? There will be nothing puffy or over-rank. The substantial elements are there, ripe and energetic. But with a weak, puffy straw this could not be realized. So the grass—and this is a very important point—is of the same nature, firm, concentrated, having the good qualities which it derived from the soil, nothing sour, nothing rank, grown on a well-drained, well aerated land, yet a heavy, well-sustained crop, yielding largely, and of such valuable properties.

Thus there is an advantage in a rich soil aside from its greater fertility, and it is of the utmost importance. This in fruit, in the berry of the grain, in the quality of our grasses; our tubers, our garden stuff. A live soil will do this. This means a drained soil (either naturally or artificially), a well-mixed, well-balanced, old soil, that is, ripe—it wants time to do the work of chemistry.

Manure is well; manure is indispensable; it is the rough material out of which are formed the products of the farm; it is its body, as the land is the medium through which this is realized. But it is far from being without the aid of other means; thus you can grow nothing in mere manure. The importance, then, of the aids. But the aids alone are equally useless. The two must go together, and there must be a fitting union, all harmony, adaptability. And this is pretty well understood, so as to be successful. The good farmer knows what he can do; and he knows that there is certainty attending his efforts; this by aiming at a well-balanced, healthy soil. Such a soil will work (act), and work well for him—will preserve itself against the many attacks, of the frost, drouth, rust, &c. There is early cultivation; there are early—and therefore the healthier and better—crops; the summer finds a growth which is cool, and which will extend, under the wise care of the owner, to a late fall, and even enter winter, protecting itself (its roots), and the soil that so nourishes it; even during the winter this is often retained, and in the spring opens with the first summer's growth as a start, rather as a continuation. It is this warming, rich fertility, in addition to ripeness and balance, that is wanted to norish and sustained our grasses, our grains and our fruits.—N. Y. Exchange.

The ral of the Mowing Machine.

It is one of the superior attributes of man as an animal, that his head should be the chief assistant of his hands; that that intelligence should go to supersede mere muscular force. And in this day never has there been greater scope for the exercise of brain work to the saving of hand work. In the farmer's domain is this especially true. Ten men's labor is now performed by one with the help of machinery. This saving in time is a gift of science to art for the benefit of the worker. Let him use it. Not to pile on more work, to add field to field, house to house, nor increase his stock of money wealth only; but to add to his store of ideas, to enlarge his mind, to more readily adapt himself to his new position that he may grasp more firmly the new weapons within his reach. This he may do by recreation, by taking time to think, by using his mental powers, and by study. A man is a more valuable worker so far as he better understands the natural laws of the things he works with; a better farmer as he understands more of the science of the common every day things about him, of the habits of the animals he daily associates with, of the atmosphere around him, and of the soil beneath his feet; all of which conjointly are his fellow-workers. These cannot be studied without leisure, and that now comes to him by virtue of all the mechanical helps of which he can avail himself. But he cannot do this by increasing the bounds of his farm in latitude or longitude, nor in laying out new tasks, but by working more profitably what he now has, and by making one day's labor yield as much as ten former days. This is the lesson taught by the reaper and mower and the thrashing machine.

In the Spring of 1871, we hauled the manure from the barn-yard and spread it on a field having a sandy soil. This field had been run to death by its former owner. The manure was spread very evenly, but still there were some places where it was thicker than in others. The field was plowed 7½ inches deep. Its former owner used to skim the surface. Oats were sown and dragged in. After the oats were about six inches high they were top-dressed with plaster. The season was a very dry one; scarcely any rain fell, but the oats grew remarkably fast. Standing where you could look over the field, you could see where each bit of manure had been spread; where it had been spread thickest and where thinnest, just by the difference in the growth of the oats. The field yielded 60 bushels per acre. The manure was not all buried under seven inches of soil. Each furrow lapped a little on the one before it, so that the manure may be said to have been distributed in a succession of inclined strata. In this manner a part of the manure would be near the surface, another part a little further below, while a third part would be at the bottom of the furrow, 7½ inches deep.—[Truman F. Slater, Hillsdale Co., Mich.

An Indianapolis man who paid $100,000 for some land on Wednesday, and sold the same for $186,000 on Thurnday, thought he had done enough business for the week.
